Freeloader: Offline Access

Freeloader, a small Internet application, enables users to read information gathered from popular Internet resources while remaining offline.

Many Internet users complain of delays in downloading large text and graphic files from popular Internet sites, due to heavy traffic backups—not unlike Route 95 during rush hour.

Freeloader removes these delays by automatically downloading the information specified by the user and storing it on the computer's local hard disk.

The information may then be viewed when convenient—without any delay at all.

The program is available at Internet address <http://www.freeloader.com/>.

The program was recently reviewed by The Washington Post, and has received reviews in major online publications.

It gets ☆☆☆ from DGL.

DGL & JLNP Partner

DGL announced this week a venture with JLNP of Cergy-Pontoise, France to translate and distribute DGL's line of computer software learning guides, published under the Training Express brand.

In the announcement, David Stephen Murphy, DGL President and CEO, described the joint venture as "an exciting international partnership that accelerates the expansion goals of both companies."

JLNP, lead by Jean Louis Noële-Prévo, and DGL met during an exchange visit in which representatives of the Cergy business community visited Columbia. The visit was sponsored by Columbia Association's (CA) sister city program.

During a 4-day visit, the Cergy businesspeople met with members of the local business community, toured sites in Howard County, and were hosted by the Governor in Annapolis.

In addition to distributing Training Express products in French-speaking countries, DGL's hardware products will connect French corporate LANs to the Internet.

JLNP may now also offer Internet World Wide Web services to French businesses by using computers provided by Softaid Net Works, the Columbia-based Internet service provider.

The cost of Internet access in France is about $1.50 per minute, while U.S. rates are as low as $0.04 per minute. This joint activity will allow French companies to take advantage of the Internet.

DGL and JLNP extend their gratitude to CA and the sister city program organized by Ms. Laurie Sears.
